Work underway to relocate Algansee Twp. library to 1877 township hall

ALGANSEE TWP., MI — Plans are underway to move the Algansee Branch of the Branch County District Library from the 1880 Safford General Store building to an older building, the former 1877 township hall two miles north on Ray-Quincy Road.

Library Branch Manager Teresa Shilling stated that the library requires additional space.

"We have kids coming to programs after school and throughout the summer. It's kind of hard to put 20 or 30 squiggling kids in this space and do things," she said, pointing to the small space converted to the library in 1938.

This summer, 150 children started and completed the summer reading program, and many more participated.

District Library Director John Rucker said the Algansee branch is the first of six in the system to return to pre-pandemic activity levels.

The Algansee Township board decided to relocate the library from the rented store to the township hall when it built a new hall using funds from the American Rescue Plan Act.

The township offices relocated in August, and renovation of the old building commenced.

The main space is only about 100 square feet larger. Still, Shilling said there is a room in the back to accommodate meetings and programs without disrupting and rearranging the furniture, as is currently done in the library.

The new space features modern heating, air conditioning, and restrooms. The township replaced the old wooden floor with stronger beams to hold the books and materials.

In the current space, Shilling said the children's books are on just two sets of shelves near the door. Every inch of the three rooms in a former home is crammed with materials.

Rucker said the District Library Board had committed, and the township had received $60,000 toward the renovation. The township contributed $30,000.

Rucker said there was no requirement for the library to pay for the project.

"We had the funds available. The township has been so excellent to us, we're happy to partner, and it just seemed like the right thing to do," she said.

The library director stated that an additional $30,000 in private donations will cover the cost of interior fixtures and complete the final stages of the renovation.

Shilling, who grew up using the current library, said in the new space, "We'll almost double the juvenile section."

Rucker said that, despite being the smallest branch in the Branch District Library system, the Algansee Library plays a vital role in the community, offering books, magazines, videos, internet access, and programs for residents from the very young to the older.

Shilling said the library obtained computers in 2000 from the Bill Gates Foundation. The move allows them to connect to high-speed internet.

There is a picture on the wall of Gwen Safford Dove, the long-time librarian. Dove, the former teacher at the one-room school at the corner of Campbell and Ray-Quincy roads, became the librarian at the store in 1938 when the school closed. She served for decades.

Dove died at age 87 in 1998.

Dove taught Shilling's grandfather, former township supervisor John Shilling. After the school closed, John Shilling relocated the one-room school to his farm to prevent it from being torn down.

Her picture and other memorabilia will have a place in the new old library building.
