How come the library allow the kids to play
Violent ~~game~~ game in library?

I think Library should not allow kids to play violent computer game in the library.

My son (7 years old) wants to read the book.
But he saw these kids play shooting game.

Library = peaceful = safe = reading place = study place = friendly environment for Everyone especially for kids not violent game

The Coldwater Branch Manager followed up with the patron who said that they love the library but just wanted to share their opinion.

Follow-up from Director of Technology: Per BDL's policy framework, and legal requirements, we currently block over a million internet domains for explicit adult content. Our provider for this list gives us 70 different categories of possible domains to block, but there are not any subcategories for games, so we have no easy way to identify only domains offering violent games. Beyond this technical limitation, BDL notes in our Materials Selection Policy that "patrons may find that not all materials will be suitable for all audiences. Though some patrons may reject certain materials for their personal use, they cannot restrict the freedom of others to use Library materials." We encourage all parents and guardians to make their expectations clear to their children and to accompany them in their computer use at the library.
